REPORT SERIOUS UNREST IN INDIA

MANILA, July 6.—Serious unrest throughout India is reported by officers and passengers of the Spanish

The official explanation is that the troubles are due to the present international differences, but it is said they are in reality the result of animosity felt by the natives against the white population.

There have been several outbreaks and it is reported, in the vicinity of Colombo, where it is understood that the natives were severely punished for their military forebearance. Several Englishmen have been murdered and Colombo stores have been looted.

As a result, martial law has been declared, all Europeans have been armed and all British subjects physically fit are being sent to the military service. Arrangements are said to have been made to transport all white women and children either to the coast or to the interior.

Made Standard by the French Government
The French Government ordered 200,000 boxes of Cadum ointment for use in its Army and Navy, which is indisputable evidence of its high character. The formula from which

It is made thus meets the requirements of the War and Health Department. Cadum Ointment becomes one of the standard remedies of the world. Cadum ointment is wonderfully soothing and healing to an inflamed, irritated or diseased skin, and has proved a blessing to many who have suffered for years from tormenting skin troubles. Itching, redness, and burning, itching at once, and begins working with the first application. Obstinate cases of eczema, sores, eruptions, rashes, chaps and other skin disorders usually yield to its curative properties. Trial box, 10c; large box, 25c.—Advertisement.

RUSSIA MAKES APOLOGY TO SWEDEN

PETROGRAD, July 6.—Sweden has complained to the Petrograd Foreign Office that her neutrality was violated by the Russian squadron in the recent naval battle off the island of Gotland in the Baltic Sea.

The Russian government has expressed its regret and given positive assurance that it intends to observe Swedish neutrality strictly.

In its reply to the Swedish protest, Russia attributes the fact that a shell dropped in Swedish territorial waters to the fact that the weather was foggy and hindered accurate firing.

The following official statement on Sweden's protest and Russia's reply was issued here today:

"The Swedish minister at Petrograd has communicated to the Imperial Government that during Friday's battle near the island of Gotland, when Russian ships were pursuing a German warship, a shell fell over the Swedish island of Ostergran and fell in the water about 200 yards from shore.

MINISTER PROTESTED.
"The minister, in the name of his government protested that such an incident was a violation of Swedish neutrality. At the same time the minister informed the Imperial Government that steps had been taken by the Swedish government regarding the clearing of the German warship which went ashore on Gotland and the movement of its crew in Sweden.

"The Imperial government has expressed its sincere regret to the Swedish government for dropping a shell in its territory, explaining that according to the report of the admiral commanding the Baltic fleet, the incident could have been caused only by a dense fog at the spot where the shell occurred, which hindered accurate firing.

"The Swedish minister at the same time received the most positive assurance of the Russian intention strictly to observe Swedish neutrality.

"The following fact regarding the battle shows that the falling of a shell in Swedish territorial waters could only have been the result of an unfortunate accident independent of any one's will.

FIVE GERMAN SHIPS.
"The naval fight between our cruisers and the detachment of German ships consisting of a cruiser of the Augsburg type, the light cruiser Albatross, and five destroyers near the island of Gotland began Friday at 4:30 a. m. at a distance of twenty-three leagues from the coast.

Owing to foggy weather vision during the fight was greatly restricted. The dense fog hid the outlines of the hostile ships, hindering the accuracy of fire.

TELLS THE STORY REGARDING WIFE

H. M. Crawford of 37 Clifton St., Says His Wife Took Plant Juice

That the stomach is responsible for 90 per cent of all ill diseases to which the human system is heir is generally recognized by the medical profession. When we realize that it is in the stomach that the life of the body is maintained, we appreciate the importance of the stomach, and we appreciate the importance of the stomach.

My wife had suffered for ten years with stomach trouble, indigestion, dyspepsia and torpid liver. She had tried all kinds of medicine, but they did not seem to relieve her. She was so bad that she could not eat any solid food, and of she did she suffered severe pain in her stomach.

REPLY TO MEET DEMANDS OF U. S. NOTE

WASHINGTON, July 6.—The State Department today announced that Ambassador Gerard at Berlin had sent to Washington a summary of the views of the German government to be incorporated in its forthcoming note on the Lusitania case. These views agree substantially with reports from Germany during the past fortnight, indicating that the reply to President Wilson's note will be satisfactory.

The department stated that no reply has been made to this confidential communication and it is understood that some will be made until the ambassador's dispatch has been studied by President Wilson.

The German reply is not expected for a week, at least.

GERMAN REPLY MAY LEAD TO STEPS FOR
"HUMANIZING" WAR
By FREDERICK WYMER,
Special Correspondent International News Service.

BRUSSELS, via Amsterdam, July 6.—Great developments seem to emphasize the impression gained through informal conversation with prominent German officials that Germany's reply to the American note on submarine warfare will remove any probability of trouble between the United States and Germany.

Indeed, the change in German sentiment brought about by the earnest efforts of Ambassador James W. Gerard may be the basis for steps toward "humanizing" war that will extend even farther than the submarine campaign.

Ambassador Gerard's conferences with officials of the foreign office are attracting deeper interest here than the military operations because of the rigid secrecy observed. No inkling of the arguments advanced by the American envoy can be secured, but German officials are authority for the statement that the ambassador has received several important communications from the Washington State Department since the second American note reached here.

These, it is reported, were not for presentation to the German foreign office, but for the guidance of Gerard in setting forth the actual position of his government.

What counts more than the diplomatic endeavors of the American embassy is the fact that the American campaign has not been the least effective in the view of circles near the German government. It is hoped that the German submarines would be able to cut off all supplies from England. Despite the large number of ships sunk, this result has not been attained.

Gouverneur Morris—"Father of the Penny"

AMONG all the framers of the Constitution of the United States none were more adept at constructive statesmanship than the "father of the American decimal system" and originator of the copper cent. The finish, style and arrangement of the Constitution fairly belong to the brilliant and eloquent Morris. From his youth to the hour of his death he was a devoted and dauntless worker for American progress. His untiring ability as an orator was known throughout Europe, and his funeral orations on Washington, Clinton and Hamilton are measured American classics. Gouverneur Morris was an indomitable supporter of the Louisiana Purchase. He it was who rescued Lafayette from prison walls and aided him from his private purse. Personally he was very handsome; his nature was impulsive, but his heart was warm and generous. He loved society, and his hospitality was famous. All his life he drank the creative brew of malt and hops, and who will dare say that it weakened his will power or detracted from his success, his fame, his glory and his might? It was upon the terms of the Constitution of the U.S.A. that Anheuser-Busch 58 years ago founded their great institution. During these 58 years they have daily brewed from the finest barley and hops been famous for being alive with natural force and nutriment. Their great brand BUDWEISER, because of its quality, purity, mildness and exquisite flavor, exceeds the sales of any other bottled beer by millions of bottles. BUDWEISER is popular every day, and 700 people are daily employed to keep pace with the public demand.

'Red' Dooan Signed by New York Giants

NEW YORK, July 6.—Manager McGraw of the Giants, announces the purchase of Catcher "Red" Dooin, the Phillies' former pilot, from the Cincinnati club. Dooin will report for duty at once. The sorrel-topped one's acquisition doubtless means that Larry McLean will never be reinstated, as both Smith and Wendell are considered rare young receivers.

Here is a Letter from the Prohibition Candidate for Governor

The AMERICAN has received the following communication from Mr. William Shaw, the Prohibition candidate for Governor:

To the Editor of the AMERICAN:

The other night a young man staggered into the Hancock-street police station, Boston, and asked to be arrested for drunkenness, and said to the lieutenant, "I have killed my wife."

The officer went to the little tenement in the rear of North Square and found the wife dying, with her throat cut from ear to ear, and in the adjoining room two babies asleep in bed.

Who was the murderer? The husband who, if sober, would have given his life in defence of his wife? Yes, as an instrument. The saloonkeeper who sold the liquor? Yes, as an accomplice. The voter who sanctioned the business, legalized it, and placed around it the protection of law? Yes, in the final analysis, he was the murderer, and it is the accessory before the fact for all the sickening flood of poverty, insanity, vice and crime that flows from the saloon.

The AMERICAN has preached against drunkenness the most powerful sermons. But sermons alone will not stop crime. We must prohibit it by law.

Please do not let your readers believe the politicians, when they say that a vote for prohibition in Massachusetts is a vote thrown away. The city has unveiled a statue in the Public Garden of that great orator and man, Wendell Phillips. Remember the courage and faith of Wendell Phillips. Only a few years before the Civil War, Mr. Phillips was invited to address the men who believed in the abolition of slavery in a remote locality in Maine. He journeyed the distance when transportation facilities are not what they are today and addressed just TWELVE men. When the one who introduced him attempted to apologize for the few who were present, Phillips replied: "This meeting is worth while. It is well worth my journey. Twelve men in a rigorous cause which involves the fate of a race, can make a revolution."

The events of a few years proved Wendell Phillips a prophet. But slavery did not produce one-half the crime that the use of intoxicating liquor is producing in this country. Every vote which is given to the cause of prohibition is an encouragement to those who are fighting for it. If every one who believes that the sale of intoxicating liquor ought to be abolished would vote for the candidates who advocate its abolition, we should have a social and moral revolution in this country the like of which has never been before in the history of the world.

I have no personal ambition. I have offered to withdraw my candidacy in favor of the candidates of either of the two leading political parties if he and his party would endorse the cause of prohibition. That offer stands today. But if it is rejected, I want by my candidacy to enable Massachusetts to take its place in the movement for the abolition of this terrible slavery, and to do so in a way which the took in favor of the abolition of human slavery. Yours sincerely,

WILLIAM SHAW.

Mr. Shaw's letter speaks for itself. The facts which heretofore need no comment. The political conclusion which he seeks to draw must be approved or disapproved by each man according to his conscience and intelligence.

The Public Will Back You Up, Mr. O'Hearn

The effort of Mr. O'Hearn, acting Commissioner of Public Works, to compel the contractors who dig up our streets to observe the letter and spirit of their contract requiring them to put the streets back into their original condition before they disturbed them, will do something not only to relieve present intolerable conditions a little, but will also, if persevered in as a fixed and determined policy, greatly reduce the upkeep cost of the highways.

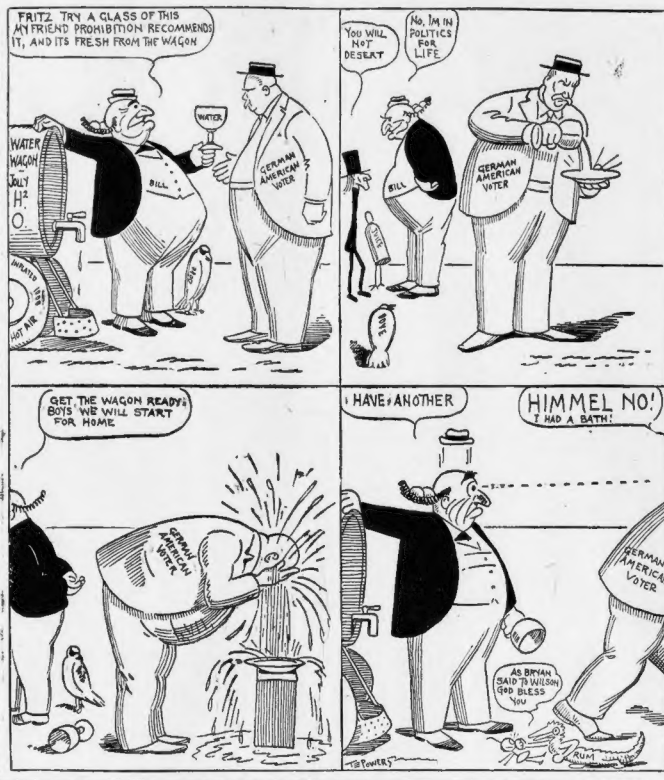

Mr. O'Hearn ought to be encouraged in his attitude on this question. Contractors have a way of putting pressure upon the public officials which requires not a little courage sometimes to withstand.

Let Mr. O'Hearn enforce this rule impartially and vigorously, compelling not only the ordinary contractor, but the public service corporations like the Telephone, Electric Light and the Boston Elevated, if they are delinquent in this matter, to do their duty. Mr. O'Hearn may confidently rely upon public support in this good work.

Wonderful Romance in the Earth's Interior

By Garrett P. Serviss

"IT" was possible to sink a shaft through the earth and install a passenger lift in it, what position would the car and the passengers assume on coming out on the other side of the earth? Please explain the action of the laws of gravitation in this case. Which would be up and which down, and when would power be required to operate the car? It seems all topsy-turvy to me—D. R."

An answer to this kind of question is worth while because it affords an especially vivid conception of the way gravitation works, a thing about which even many educated people appear to have very confused ideas.

Assume that the shaft runs through the center of the earth. Also, in order to avoid quibbles, suppose the earth to be a perfect, smooth, homogeneous sphere, and neglect the effect upon a falling body of the earth's rotation around its axis. The car would descend, as far as the center, in the same manner that an ordinary passenger lift descends from the top of a building, being drawn down by the force of gravity, or "the attracting of gravitation."

Every particle of matter in the earth exercises its share of this force by pulling toward itself, and the aggregate effect of all these small forces is a single pull toward the earth's center. The amount of this pull upon any body is measured by what we call weight. The weight increases or decreases not merely with the size, but with the density of the body, because the pull of gravitation is exerted equally upon every particle that the body contains, and a dense body contains more particles than a rare or light body. Consequently an iron cannon ball weighs more than a wooden bowling ball of the same size.

Now we come to a very interesting point. As long as the car remained on the surface, every particle in the earth would pull it toward the center. The majority of the particles do not pull directly toward the center with their entire attractive force, but a greater or lesser portion of the attraction of each particle is toward the center, and, as before said, the aggregate, outstanding effect of all these forces united is a single pull to the center.

But when the car had descended below the surface all the particles composing that part, or shell, of the earth situated above the level of the car, would cease to exercise a pull toward the center, and their various attractions, as Newton mathematically demonstrated, would balance or neutralize one another in such a manner that they would no longer affect the movement of the car. The practical result would be that the aggregate downward pull on the car would proportionately diminish.

As the car continued to descend the thickness of the shell of earth above its level would increase, and consequently the downward pull would decrease, until when it reached the center there would be no pull at all, the forces of attraction being balanced against one another on all sides. Here, then, the strain upon the cable supposed to regulate the velocity of the car's descent would cease entirely, because the car and everything that it contained, would completely lose their weight. A passenger in the car would lose all sense of direction. There would be for him neither up nor down. He could not stand or fall. He could, however, still use his muscular strength, and might, by a push, or a kick, set himself spinning like a thistle down in the wind. But if he tried to walk he would bound away like a rubber ball at the first step!

In order to continue the trip of the car up to the opposite surface of the earth it would be necessary to reverse the action of the cable so that now it would lift against the force of gravity. As soon as the car was drawn away from the center the sense of up and down would come back to the passenger. What had before been the ceiling would now become the floor. The weight would increase with the increase of distance from the center, and the strain upon the cable would grow gradually until the surface was again reached.

Emerging on the other side of the earth from that which he had left, the passenger would have his feet pointing in exactly the opposite direction from that to which he had been accustomed on the other side, but he would be totally unaware of any eccentricity in his posture, stride, no matter where we may be on the earth, our senses tell us that down is toward the center, and up is away from it.

It should be added that if the car were simply dropped into the shaft, instead of being let down from one side of the earth and pulled up to the other, it would (neglecting the resistance of the air in the shaft), shoot through the earth attaining its greatest velocity as it passed the center, and rising to the surface on the opposite side by virtue of the momentum accumulated during its fall to the center. Its motion would resemble that of a pendulum. The time required to fall to the center would be about twenty-one minutes, and the same time to rise from the center to the opposite surface; so that, under the impulse of the earth's gravitation, one might travel straight through the earth in less than three-quarters of an hour.

Two Pictures of Youth Contrasted

One of Pretty Girls in Angelic Garb Representing Goodness and Purity; The Other Illustrating Depths of Despair Due to Drugs

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

HERE had been a beautiful picture shown to the eye at one of the New York theatres. It was a charity benefit for the homeless children. The curtain went up and revealed three exquisite young girls in the morning of life, dressed in classic flowing robes of white, seated at three golden harps. The stage setting in back of them represented a fair road, winding up a majestic mountain side. While the eye was dazzled and delighted with the radiant picture the ear was next enchanted with the heavenly strains of the Angel's Serenade, played by three young girls on the three golden harps, and accompanied by one of them who sang the air in a voice of rare sweetness.

The memory of this beautiful picture occupied the mind of the writer of this article when a friend said, "Come with me to the hospital. I want you to see some of the people in whom I am interested there." The first people to be seen were those in the nervous ward, men and women who, from various causes, were on the point of nervous prostration or more serious malady, and who had been sent by their friends or relatives to be studied by the physicians in charge. After their cases were decided upon they would be sent away to other institutions for further development along neurological lines. A large percentage of the patients who come into these wards for examination can trace their troubles back to bad inheritance. The sins of the fathers and the mothers have developed palsy, insanity and epilepsy in the children. Alcoholism and sexual immorality, opium and drugs, all these have helped produce the wretched crop of human beings who are found in the neuro-wards of our institutions.

After visiting these wards the physician said: "Now do you want to see the 'dope' victims? They may interest you." So we proceeded to the drug ward. And what a sight we beheld! More than half a hundred young men, all under the age of thirty, suffering from one cause—the use of heroin and morphine. There were many cots in the ward and each cot contained a victim suffering from the first stages of this affliction, unable to sit up, and in the greater part of the cases in a stupor. Others, attired in dressing gowns, were wandering about the room, patiently waiting for the time until they were pronounced cured. One young man dressed in a trim business suit, quite normal in appearance, was about to take his departure that afternoon. The doctor questioned him for the benefit of the visitors regarding his case. "How long did you use the drug?" he asked, and "what caused you to begin the habit?" "It was something over a year ago," the man replied. "I was a professional in the world of sports. A man told me I would have very much more speed and skill if I took heroin, so I took it and for a little time what the man said seemed to be true. Then I began to go down, until I landed here. Now, thank God, I am cured of the habit and shall never go back to it."

The other men in the room were the color of clay, devoid of all animation and vitality of expression. One by one the doctor questioned them, and one by one they responded. "We began the use of the drug because we were told it would make us feel better, brace us up, and give us more 'go.'" At least a dozen declared they had acquired the habit in the pool-room. Not one claimed that he had taken the drug to relieve any physical ache or ailment.

When we realize that this is but one institution of hundreds in Greater New York where similar congregations of unfortunate drug victims can be seen, we must awaken to the consciousness of the great menace for the race which lies in the drug habit. It is well to have laws, stringent and severe, for the punishment of all the monsters who sell drugs to their fellow beings or who induce them to begin the habit; but that is only dealing with the habit after it is acquired. More important than this is the awakening of the minds of parents, teachers and friends to the danger which threatens the youth of the land. Youths and girls are frequently in the grasp of this octopus while the parents are wholly unconscious of the situation—in fact, unconscious that such a drug as heroin exists in the world.

Parents must awaken and learn the danger which lurks at their threshold. They must talk to their young children on these subjects and give them the protection of knowledge. War we know is a great evil and threatens the destruction of hundreds of thousands while it rages in any land. But war is only a part of the danger. The drug habit is ever with us and its menace to the country is today greater than that of war. Let us awaken and protect our young from a habit which renders existence far worse than death.
